WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

Heather Phipps, a 1999 History major is currently serving as an Assistant Prosecutor for the City of Lima, Ohio. After graduating from Huntington, she attended Ohio Northern University and graduated with a degree in law. She prosecutes misdemeanor criminal and traffic cases. She felt that HC's history professors had really prepared her for law school. The skills she had learned in reading, comprehending, writing, and thinking analytically really assisted her in law school and in her current position. Her words of wisdom to undergraduate students would be: "Be thankful for the time they have at HC because it goes by so quickly. The lessons I learned and the friendships I formed there are lasting. Some people have asked me if I had it to do all over again would I go to Huntington College. I always tell them yes, without a doubt!"

BEWARE OF ENERGY SAPPERS - If you exercise, eat right, sleep well and still feel draggy; it's probably due to boredom, depression, stress or some other problem. These steps will help you eliminate situations that can undermine your energy. 1) Make sure you don't have a medical problem - you should see a doctor if fatigue interferes with your daily routine or if you're more tired than seems reasonable for your lifestyle. If you have a thyroid problem, for example, medication could make a big difference in your energy. 2) Check your medications - ask your doctor about possible side effects. Many medications - including antihistamines and some antidepressants - can cause drowsiness. 3) Learn to say no - being overcommitted is one of the most common causes of exhaustion. If you have trouble declining requests, rehearse with a friend. And remember, you don't need a reason - Just say, "I'm really sorry, but I can't." 4) Do something about excess noise - when you're subjected to loud noises, your heart beats faster, muscles tense and your blood pressure may surge. Try to muffle the sound with earplugs or white noise or, seek other ways to control the noise. Watch for more "Energy Sappers" next week!
