The State of Italy.

Our latest advice from Italy, and particularly from Rome, represent the position of the Pope as far from enviable.—The contrasts between the pontifical administration and the brief era of the Republic, force themselves upon every mind. During the Republic no man was proscribed, exiled, or even imprisoned for his political opinions; but by the very anarchy of the Pope forty thousand were proscribed for that cause alone, and at least ten thousand of Rome's best citizens have left the city to await in exile the return of better days.

The army of the Republic molested no citizen in his person or property, and yet the public peace was maintained; an army of twenty thousand Frenchmen now scarce suffices to rule the city. Arrest and imprisonment are daily occurrences; it is death for one supposed to be inimical to the administration to be found with arms upon his person or in his dwelling, and order is maintained only by force and fear.—Yet in spite of every precaution, opposition to spiritual tyranny spreads among the people. The proclamations of Mazzini—who never laid down his authority—continue to be placarded on the walls of the city, and are read with eagerness by the people. Handbills and tracts inculcating sound religious and political sentiments are everywhere scattered abroad. It is the opinion of many intelligent Italians that the moral revolution of Italy, at least in the cities, so far as relates to the papal supremacy, is accomplished.—Two great ideas now occupy more and more the minds of the Italian people:—these are unity and nationality, and the separation of the secular from the ecclesiastical power. In Piedmont, where there is freedom of speech and of the press, these aspirations are boldly avowed; in Lombardy, the papal States and Southern Italy, they are more secretly propagated. The next movement in this direction will be so fully concerted and matured that it can hardly fail of success. The Italian spirit is not crushed. We imagine that Pia Nova will need all the "aid and comfort" that Archbishop Hughes can carry him; he will be disposed to say, "All that you have said, my son, of the decline of Protestantism, may be very pretty in theory, and it is very well for you to talk so largely; but for what will you insure my tiara when Louis Napoleon shall be dismissed from power and these twenty thousand French bayonets shall be needed at home."

The cause of Italy is in noble hands. Of Mazzini, who from his quiet study in London is yet the main spring of the reform movement, we have often had occasion to speak. A purer patriot does not breathe. Garibaldi, the heroic general, is among us, and we have had some opportunity of learning his character.—Many have regarded him as a lawless brigand, or a military adventurer; but instead of this he is one of the most modest, benignant and disinterested of men; one who has sacrificed his fortune and hazarded his life for his country, and is ready to do this again; yet he has refused all emolument and desires no praise. Those who best know him regard him with the highest esteem and affection.—May he live to see his country free.—Independent.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

When Sir Isaac Newton changed his residence, and went to live in Leicester Place, his next door neighbor was a widow lady, who was much puzzled by the little she observed of the habits of the philosopher. One of the Fellows of the Royal Society called upon her one day, when among other domestic news, she mentioned that some one had come to reside in the adjoining house, who, she felt certain, was a poor maniac, a maniac, "Because," she continued, "he diverts himself in the oddest way imaginable.—Every morning, when the sun shines so brightly that we are obliged to draw the window-blinds, he takes his seat on a little stool before a tub of soap-suds, and occupies himself for hours blowing soap-bubbles through a common clay pipe, which he intently watches floating about until they burst. He is, doubtless," she added, "now at his favorite amusement, for it is a fine day; do come and look at him." The gentleman smiled, and they went up stairs, when, after looking through the staircase-window into the adjoining court-yard, he turned round and said, "My dear madam, the person whom you suppose to be a poor lunatic, is no other than the great Sir Isaac Newton, studying the refraction of light upon tin plates, a phenomenon which is beautifully exhibited upon the surface of a common soap-bubble."

GEOGRAPHICAL DISCOVERIES IN CENTRAL AFRICA.—

About two years ago, the scientific world was surprised by the announcement that Drs. Krapf and Rebmann, who had been for some time zealously employed, in connection with the Church Missionary Society, in spreading the doctrines of christianity in eastern and central Africa, had, in the course of their missionary labors, discovered a mountain or mountains, within one degree of the equator, and about two hundred miles distant from the sea, which were covered with perpetual snow, and which there was every reason to suppose were no other than Ptolemy's "Mountains of the Moon." This announcement was received with considerable skepticism by some, though it was readily believed by others, and has occasioned considerable discussion at various times. In the course of the past summer, however, the arrival of Dr. Krapf in England, and the consequent publication of his journals in the Church Missionary Intelligencer, seem to leave no doubt as to the existence of the mountains in question, which are probably those in which the White Nile takes its rise.

St. Patrick.

St. Patrick is, as all the world knows, the patron St. of Ireland. The authentic history of this country properly begins with him, in the fifth century. He appears to have been a native of Franco, and to have been made captive by one of the Kings of Ireland. He was sold as a slave, and his master set him to watch over the flock of sheep. After seven years' servitude, he made his escape to France, where, after visiting his parents, he devoted himself to study in a monastery. During this period, he had a remarkable dream, which was regarded by him as a vision from Heaven. In this he seemed to receive innumerable letters from Ireland, in one of which was written, "The voice of the Irish." From this time he thought of nothing but performing some holy work in the service of that people. He spent several years in traveling and meditation; and at length being constituted a bishop, and having, at his own request, been appointed by the Pope of Rome to that office, he proceeded on his long-contemplated mission to Ireland.

Ignorance is a blank sheet, on which we may write; but error is a scribbled one, on which we must first erase.

It is observed that the most censorious are the least judicious, who, having nothing to recommend themselves, will be finding fault with others. No man envies the merit of another who has enough himself.

Every man's actions must form a centre of influence upon others; and every deed, however trivial, has some weight in determining the future destiny of the world.

Fashion—a power as invisible and as despot as the grand Lama of Tibet.—Her mandates, of which the origin is utterly unknown, are nevertheless understood and communicated by some inscrutable instinct and obeyed with still more inexplicable and unenquiring submission.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

For the Religious Telescope. JOHN GINERICH.

A mistake occurred in the biography of John Ginerich, published last Spring. He was fifty-seven years, ten months, instead of sixty-seven. He lived near Mexico, Juniata Co., Pa. His friends are desirous that this mistake should be corrected, as he had a son who left home about eight years ago, with a drove of horses—sold his horses in Philadelphia, but never returned, nor have they had any account of him since, that could be relied upon. They have fears that he was murdered, but again think he may yet be alive; if so, hoping the paper containing his father's biography may fall into his hands, he may be induced to come home, as it will be to his interest to do so.

Other papers are requested to notice these things. WM. BEIGHSEL.

Died, in Benton: October 23d, of a short, but severe sickness, Robert Weeks, an Elder of the Sandusky Conference.

On the 1st of January, present year, Bro. Weeks left his home for Benton Mission, where he labored with extraordinary zeal, ability, and success. He left that Mission a cultivated field, adorned with the beauties of our holy religion. Many witnesses has he left there, whom we have the best of reasons to hope to meet in heaven, as the joy and crown of the faithfulness of this servant of the Lord. He visited from house to house, his theme was religion, his mission "to win souls to Christ;" and many did he win, in that short time.

An Conference appointed him to Green Creek Circuit, which, however, he never reached.

He was removed in the noon-tide hour of life, leaving a pious wife, and two small children, with a weeping church, to mourn their loss. H. G. SPAYTH, Tiffin Nov. 19, '50.

A WORD FOR THE LADIES.

Mrs. SWISSHELM, of the Pittsburg Saturday Visitor, gives the following characteristic counsel to her female friends, who appear to display a very curious style of locomotion. "Walking is getting out of fashion, and young women now-a-days wriggle along as if they were moved along by Erickson's patent propellers. Their walk is crooked as that of a ship with all sail and no rudder. They are as graceful as a militia colonel's horse, or a "broken-down racer." I notice they are awfully deformed, too, as a general rule having great humps on their backs like dromedaries—all of which is doubtless very pleasant to traders in cotton batting and hay. This "new edition" of shape may be a great improvement or the original must be shocking bad, in one of these wadded young women. If one of them should be furnished by nature with one of these humps or heaps, she would be exhibited as a curiosity at a fair peep, like a double headed pig.

I hope, after reading these strictures, that the young women will give up wriggling through the streets like a parcel of eels—content themselves with human form, and try the experiment, at last, of acting like respectable beings.

Soo a Christian Die.

Peace, as you wish your way From the realm of endless day, Do join to grace our lower sky; Come, and wander; Come, and see a Christian die.

Ye who tempt the hosts of glory, Ye who have redemption's story, See your leader wander die; Come, and wander; Come, and see a Christian die.

Ye who mock at revelation, Ye who scorn your own salvation, Try to reach this touchstone by; Come, and wander; Come, and see a Christian die.

Ye who search creation o'er, To extend kind nature's store, See a beam all your own fire; Come, and wander; Come, and see a Christian die.

Ye who still an unwept pore On the page of classic lore, Feast your mind, and feast your eye; Come, and wander; Come, and see a Christian die.

Kiss me, do you love your friend? To the deathbed hither bend; Hear the dying Christian cry; Welcome, friends, to see me die.

(LONDON CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.)

Eloquence of the Hands

The hands are, by the very instincts of humanity, raised in prayer; clasped in affection; wrung in despair; pressed on the forehead when the soul is "perplexed in the extreme;" drawn inward, to invite; thrust forth objectively, to repel; the fingers point to indicate; and are snapped in disdain; the palm is laid upon the heart, in the invocation of subdued feeling; and on the brow of the compassionate in benediction. The expressive capacity of the hands was never more strikingly displayed than in the orisons of the deaf and dumb. Their teacher stood with closed eyes, and addressed the Deaf by those signs made with the fingers which constitute a language for the speechless.—Around him were grouped more than a hundred mutes, followed with reverend glances every motion. It was a visible, but not an audible worship.

SUFFERING.—There is a great want about all Christians who have not suffered. Some flowers must be broken or bruised, before they emit any fragrance. All the wounds of Christ send out sweetness—all the sorrows of Christians do the same. Commend to me a bruised brother, a broken reed—one like the Son of Man. To me there is something sacred and sweet in all suffering; it is so much akin to the Man of sorrows.

FALLEN FRUIT.

Be very careful to gather all punctured or decaying fruits, whether on your trees or on the ground, and give them to your hogs. If you do not, the worms which they contain, and which have been the cause of their premature decay, will make their escape into the ground, and you will find the evils which await their visitations increase upon you another season.

APPOINTMENTS.

The Lord permitting, I will fill the following appointments: At Moncton, Tuesday Evening, Dec. 24th.

COMMUNICATED.

George Hetzler, Departed this life, Sept. 2d, 1850; aged 68 years, 9 months and 15 days.

Brother Hetzler was a devoted servant of God,—he lived in the enjoyment of religion for many years, and died a triumphant death.

On the following day, his remains were conveyed to the Brown Run Chapel Cemetery, followed by an affectionate companion and family, together with a large circle of friends.

Bro. H. is gone to the glory world, and may this dispensation of God's providence, be an encouragement to the friends and neighbors of the deceased, to prepare to meet him.

The occasion was improved by the writer, from the 2d chapter of Rev. last part of the 10th verse. GEO. GEETING, Germantown, Ohio, Nov. 21, 1850.

Mary, Wife of James Pocock, departed this life Nov. 7th, '50; aged 34 yrs. 5 ms. and 27 ds.

She died of dropsy. She was a worthy member of the United Brethren Church in Woodbury, and esteemed by all who knew her.

Her funeral occasion was improved from Job 14: 12. E. C. WRIGHT.

AGRICULTURAL.

CRANBERRIES.

We were yesterday shown a jar of cultivated cranberries, grown on a patch set out only two years ago, on an otherwise worthless corner of bog-land in Salem County, New Jersey. The berries are very large, and of a beautiful red color. There is a growing attention to the cultivation of this fruit among farmers in various sections, and we are assured there is no more profitable or reliable crop.—To a single acre when in full bearing, producing a yield worth in the market from five hundred to six hundred dollars.
